quarantined artists, inspired by the corona virus

- Now that the museums are physically closed as a security measure during the coronavirus crisis, new ways of making cultural visits through their websites have been developed. But also, since art is inspired by life, other web platforms have spawned to express how artists are living this pandemic.
- This is how the first virtual museum about the coronavirus was born. Its name is Covid Art Museum

"Our selection criteria is to choose works that are made in the quarantine period, that transmit and reflect what we are all living and feeling."

"We think the pandemic will end eventually, but art never dies. For the time being, this will be our archive on Arte Covid, and in the future, all those interested will be able to find out how the artists expressed themselves during this period," concluded the founders.

Are we witnessing the emergence of a bacteriological movement?
Could it be that quarantines, in addition to time, trigger our creativity?

basepatada 🔥🔥🔥🔥 But what does God have to do with your problems? people always blame their problems on someone else)) it's time to answer for your

In the era of social distancing, millions of artists around the world have found creative ways to reach people virtually.

- *Artists around the world are adapting to shutdowns by swapping physical performance spaces for virtual ones.
- *Social distancing comes at a great price for both artists and audiences.
- *Artists are finding creative ways to keep people connected during a pandemic that keeps us apart.
